

Look, There's a Brand-New Brat Pack!

You know all those adorable little tykes traipsing around Hollywood these days? They're starting to look a lot like our favorite eighties posse. Here's who should play whom in a Breakfast Club remake.

Judd Nelson

Molly Ringwald

Emilio Estevez

Ally Sheedy

Anthony Michael Hall

Levi McCaughey goes all outcast with his rolled-up jeans and bandanna.

Honor Warren sort of resembles a teenage Ally Sheedy (minus the angst), don't you think?

Kingston Rossdale may have rocker parents, but he dresses like a jock!

Suri Cruise has the pretty face and good-girl outfits—all the makings of a popular girl.

Cruz Beckham gets the whole look down, including the khakis!

Sweet career, Dylan Lauren!

THE DOS & DON'TS OF SMART BUSINESS

Dylan Lauren, 36, founder of Dylan's Candy Bar and author of a new book by the same name, shares some hard-earned wisdom with Glamour.

DON'T think you have to know what you want to be the second you finish school. All of your experiences affect you. For instance, I studied pop art in college—not my ultimate career, but a big part of our store's look and packaging.

DO follow your dream. As much as I love fashion, candy is my real passion. I knew I had to pursue that, rather than my father's. [Dad is Ralph Lauren.]

DON'T assume that you need to be "old" to start a company. But you do need knowledge—educate yourself!

DO set a great example: Never slack off, always show you're serious about what you do. People will believe in you.

DON'T listen to doubters! When people told me my idea wouldn't work, I was determined to prove them wrong—and I did! —Kristin Koch
